COLORED GRADUATES.

Class of Six Received Diplomas Last Night—Highly Creditable Concert.

At the Opera House last night a very large audience of colored people assembled to witness a highly creditable concert given by the pupils of the Colored public schools, and the presentation of diplomas to the graduating class. Six students completed the course of ten studies this year. They are Ben Arthur Boyd, Pauline Gladys Postelle, Luciebell Hubbert, Ophelia Beatrice Robinson, Pearl Lillian Jefferson, and B. Carrie Leavell.

Miss Katie McDaniel, County Superintendent, in conversation with a representative of the DAILY KENTUCKIAN yesterday said that she had every reason to feel proud of this class. The examination which they passed was a special one, and the questions were selected from a list prepared for the examination of teachers.

In order to secure a second-class certificate as teacher it is necessary for the applicant to secure a mark not lower than fifty on this examination. Not a member of the class was marked as low as 75, showing their own proficiency as well as the thoroughness of the schools.

The diplomas were received by the county superintendent from Frankfort Wednesday. They were beautiful specimens of the engraver's art. They were presented to the graduates last night by A. C. Brent, Chairman of the Board of Trustees for the colored city school.

Hopkinsville Tobacco Market.

May 11, 1898. The offerings this week were the largest of the year, and were composed entirely of 1897 crop.

The condition was an improvement over previous week. There appeared at nearly all of the warehouses some very nice Bremen, Italian and Regie styles, but nothing in the way of selections on sale.

Highest price $14.25. The market had a good deal of snap and vim. However, at times it was a little irregular, but prices were well sustained from beginning to end on all grades. The farmers are very busy preparing their land for the intended crop, and no doubt on the next season 50 per cent. of the crop will be set:

LIEUT. BARNADOU.

The Brave Young Officer Wounded at Cardenas.

Washington, May 13.—While Lieut. Barnadou may have been reckless with the torpedo boat Winslow, as he is a fearless young fellow, he was engaged in a most important and dangerous undertaking—the work of locating torpedoes and mines in the harbor of Cardenas in anticipation of the larger ships of the squadron next week. The Winslow being a small boat, drawing only a few feet of water, Lieut. Barnadou could run about the harbor without danger of hitting a torpedo or a mine and was able by the use of scientific means to make a map of the bottom of the bay showing the location of these dangerous impediments. He made some of them harmless by cutting the wires with which they were to be exploded from a lookout on the land.

Even a layman can appreciate the difficulties and the danger of this task, particularly when it was performed under the very guns of the fortresses which protect that harbor and in the presence of numerous small gunboats, which were kept there for the very purpose of preventing it. Lieut. Barnadou is a brilliant and conscientious young officer, of remarkable scientific attainments and gifted with an unusual faculty for acquiring languages. To him is due the rapid advancement of the United States in the use of smokeless powder. That has been his specialty for several years, and the experiments he has conducted at the torpedo station at Newport have been carefully watched by all the naval military authorities in the world.

Ensign Bagley is the first officer to fall in the war, although Engineer Merritt and Lieut. Jenkins went down with the Maine, and Ensign Breckinridge, whose father has just been made a Major-General, was swept off the narrow deck of the torpedo boat Cushing while on its way across to Cuba and was drowned. Bagley was the most famous man in the class of 1897, because he was for three years the full-back and for two years the captain of the football team and the best all round athlete at the academy. He was not much of a scholar and stood only four from the bottom of his class, but he was an excellent sailor and always very popular with his comrades and the men who were under him. His mother is a widow who lived in Washington during the Cleveland administration, while her brother, Josephus Daniels, now editor of the Raleigh News and Observer, was chief clerk of the interior department. His sister, Miss Bagley, is a clerk in the geology survey. He was a classmate and roommate of Ensign Breckinridge and brought his body home from Key West. Assistant Engineer Merritt of the Maine was also a classmate, and Bagley makes the fifth of the class of 1897 to die a violent death.
